Statement Made by the Philosophy Dept. after Meeting:

"The students and faculty of the department of Philosophy have met together in the absence of their chairman and in mourning for the hundreds of thousands of Asians and Americans who have died in the war in Indochina, and in mourning for those students who died at Kent State University in Ohio, and in opposition to the continuance of that war, We do resolve that:

1. We are on strike for the rest of the semester; classes and examinations are suspended.

2. The department will design and engage in appropriate activities in this period of mourning.

UNH Faculty is undecided. The UNH faculty met Wednesday at 9:00 A.M. to decide upon a course of action in regard to the student strike at U.N.H. The meeting was closed with no results and a General Faculty Meeting was called for 2:00 P.M. in Johnson Theater. Student turnout was so great that the meeting was moved to the Field House. Here the meeting was turned into a meeting of the whole and again nothing was decided.

The following proposals were submitted to the faculty, but no action was taken. Proposals to UNH Faculty:

1. We move that the UNH Faculty declare itself to be in support of an immediate and total withdrawal of U.S. forces from Indo-China.

2. We move to suspend regularly scheduled activities at the University in view of the national concern over the war in Indo-China and as an act of sympathy for the slain Kent State students. At the same time, we move that University facilities be kept open and operating in order to devote our time and energy to confronting national, state, and local issues.

Among the programs suggested as rational alternatives to normal university activities are the following, which are open to interpretation and action by those members of the community interested in implementing them:

A. That the University community undertake a state-wide educational program with a view towards involving the citizens of New Hampshire in discussions of those national and state issues which concern us all at this time.

B. That the University be kept open and operating after the end of the regular semester to facilitate these efforts.

3. We move that the office of the academic vice-president, in coordination with students and faculty be directed to come up with procedures for insuring that the academic interests of students be protected.

4. We move that the combined faculties of UNH declare Friday, May 8 as a day of mourning for the seven slain Kent State students and that a group of people be charged with planning activities for that day.

5. We resolve that the University community stand together in opposing any attempt to interfere with the rights of free expression and free assembly. In particular, we oppose any and all punitive actions directed against those involved in organizing the appearance of the "Chicago 7" defendants.
LIBERATION CLASSES

There will be a general meeting for all people interested in organizing workshops in connection with liberation classes, at 11 AM, in the Strafford Room, JBP, Thursday (today).

The following workshop topics have been discussed with tentative leaders assigned:

- Restructuring the University
- Racism and the Black Panther Party
- Indochina: A History of the Nationalist Struggle
- History of the U. S. Labor Movement
- Nonviolent Resistance, Its Theory and Practice
- Women's Liberation
- Third World Movements
- European Student Movements
- Draft Resistance
- Guerilla Theatre
- The Military-Industrial Complex and ROTC
- Population and Ecology (Zero Population Growth)
- High School Education
- Narcotics
- The Illusion of Democracy in the United States

We need interested volunteers to organize and conduct these and any other workshops which may be suggested. We also need people to help with publicity, etc.
ONE DAY LOST, ANOTHER TO COME

As the strike by UNH students continues against the trustees, the imperialist war in South East Asia and the oppression of all free thinking people everywhere, it has become apparent that the aborted faculty meeting, attended by about three thousand students, slowed down a total UNH strike a day.

The faculty held a hastily-called meeting Wednesday morning at which time they could come to no agreement on the strike. This is understandable for the faculty have been into their bar and have reaped more profits from the system than have students who were quick to endorse and support the strike.

In an effort to reach a definitive point the faculty held another meeting at Johnson theater at 2:00 P.M. This time, the meeting which was to be closed to students was actually crowded by students anxious to hear the faculty discussion on the strike. The faculty sat patiently awaiting some official notice as to the procedures of the meeting which they understood to be closed. Many faculty felt very intimidated. Many more students were impatient with the faculty's insistence that the students be barred.

The overcrowded conditions placed President McConnell in an uneasy position; that of deciding what to do with the students and where to hold the meeting. He announced a change in meeting places - Lundholm gymnasium, he felt, would safely accommodate the crowd but, what to do with the source of intimidation - the students. It was decided that as procedure, the faculty only would be allowed to speak. The students were angered. "What had the faculty to hide?" was the most often uttered rhetorical question.

Several faculty members took to the floor to lobby their position that the University cease its normal operations and concentrate on developing provisional programs to better facilitate the goals of the striking students. Following a formal motion to that effect faculty opposition was expressed by numerous faculty members. Most of those in opposition addressed themselves to the atmosphere of intimidation posed by the presence of the striking students.

To the students the issues were clear; self-determination in everyone's lives regarding their life style, their education, their moral values, the draft and waging war for a military industrial war machine that is our duly elected federal government. The students remained reluctant to understand the faculty's hesitancy to support the strike.

Preceding a faculty walkout the regularly scheduled faculty meeting was terminated and an open convocation of the university community ensued. Tempers flared quickly but not without warning and approximately 50 of the 300 faculty members present walked out in protest.

The walkout became the central issue for most student speakers. Several progressive faculty members apologized for the attitudes of their few surly colleagues.

It was not a good day for student-faculty relations. Students were placed in the normal position of asking faculty sanction for anything they did on this campus. The strike objectives, they felt, were just and self-explanatory. But the faculty operate on an entirely different value system than students. One speaker used the oft quoted cliche of "a generation gap" to describe the mutual tension.

Doug Peters of the strike group asked the students why they sought the sanction of the faculty. "We can shut this place down without them," he said. At that point the so-called convocation ended with heightened frustrations among both faculty and students.

Tensions which will not be relieved until the faculty meet again this afternoon at 2:00 P.M. to decide their course of action. If the faculty vote against strike support the students anger and disrespect for the faculty will grow to abyssmal proportions. If the faculty decide to support the strike the decision will still be a day late. A day in which the university's resources could have been tapped harmoniously and with unthought of results. As it stands, the faculty get their cake, but its doubtful they'll get to eat it too. The strike continues successfully with or without them. Fight on!
